

Christine's update

Hi everyone and welcome to the first newsletter for 2008!

So much has happened in the past few months it is hard to know where to start. But most things are on the forum, so check out the latest threads. For those of you who are new to our forum, welcome and we hope you are enjoying your time with us. Our membership continues to grow at a nice pace.

You've no doubt, all seen the TAPS shows! Spookspotters, our Investigation Team are proud to announce we are now a part of the TAPS affiliates family. Be sure to check out their forum <http://www.the-atlantic-paranormal-society.com/> and site if you haven't already done so.

We have some exciting chat sessions planned for Thursday nights so if you haven't dropped in for a chat be sure to look at the chat roster and see what topics are being discussed when and by who. If you would like to lead a chat session on your pet topic, please let us know!

We are always looking for new guest chattists.

TEAM UPDATE

Spookspotters continues to evolve and improve with the appointment of a new Technical Manager Chris. Chris has an IT Management background and has years of experience with the team on investigations. In line with the Technical Management change Kells (Gremlin) has been appointed Audio Manager and Sas has been appointed Video Manager. This new change will distribute the workload more evenly and allow each person to specialise in a particular field of interest. It will also allow better reporting and backup procedures which were lacking under our previous technical manager. The Team continues to invest in new equipment and team members have just invested in new computers, both for our base office and notebooks for investigations, bringing our notebook count to more than five, contp3

A theoretical view of multiple realities by Attila

A theoretical view of multiple realities based on the interpretation of accounts

By Attila Kaldy

www.ufosociety.com.au

The proposition of multiple dimensions has long been a subject among theorists. The major issue that overshadows the concept of alternate realities is the lack of physical trace evidence. Dealing with an intangible subject as such however provides no physical matter that can be analysed and studied under controlled conditions (unless someone manages a reconnaissance mission and returns with the appropriate tangible proof. Then again, who says that the laws of physics in another reality are identical to our own?).

Let's say that these overlaying dimensions do exist. Would intelligence from a different reality have the same problematic factors? Do they also lack the physical evidence from our world to prove that we exist? And what is our interpretation of real? How do we define what is real and what is not?

The experience of 'real' is a perception conceived by our consciousness of what we touch, taste, see, hear and smell in the present – the ontology of consciousness. If these same principles of 'what is real' apply in another reality, where the law of natural existence most likely differs to our own, then the definition of 'real' becomes a controversial term. What appears to be real (physical) to us may not be real to them, and vice versa. And thus the cliché 'seeing is believing' becomes redundant. Let's take the narrow visual spectrum of the human eye as an example. This is known as the electromagnetic spectrum (radiation/energy that travels along with a stream of photons). This spectrum is often described in frequencies and wavelengths. Alpha - Beta - Gamma rays, X-rays, Ultraviolet, Infrared, Microwaves etc are all situated in different ranges within the spectrum. The visible spectrum is only a minute fraction of this range, which enables us to see on a very narrow band. Anything that emits radiation on a low or high frequency will be invisible (and inaudible if below 24Hz – infrasonic sound – or above 20kHz – ultrasonic sound).

In another assessment, according to scientific studies, the human eye receives approximately 4-billion bits of information per second, yet the brain converts only 2 thousand of that into perceivable data. An incredible amount of information is therefore 'lost in translation'. Events on a large scale may well be occurring around us right now, without anyone being consciously aware of them. However, there are those within our society who seem to hear and see more than the median human being. Is it possible that this 'sixth sense' is a result of the human brain converting more information into observable data – being consciously aware of a broader frequency? Even then, these privileged individuals must only be aware of a tiny pigment of a much larger picture.

But what of the manifestation of apparitions and other visible phenomenon of non-existing (physically) entities?

Because we are dealing with the possibility of multiple realities or multiverse, is it likely that we are misinterpreting what we are seeing?

In countries rich in cultural and social history, people have reported seeing elements of the past as if viewing a movie clip of time. Such cases involve the sighting of cavaliers, phantom carriages, marching regiments of a bygone era, etc. It is also noted that these alleged 'phantoms' seem unconscious of the terrified observers. What is more bizarre is the log of sightings of extinct animals such as thylacines, dinosaurs and large human-like primates in geological locations they were once native to. It is easy to scoff at the proposition that these elements of a lost time still exist. Again, this comes into our perception of what is real. If we are a part of a multiple overlay of realities, like skins on an onion, is it unreasonable to suggest that past and future events exist in different phases in individual layers? If that were the case, then, if we were to somehow overcome the difference in physics, would time travel be a possibility?

Psychometry Exercise by Salt Breeze

During August and September 2007 my husband and I visited several countries including Scotland and Finland. Prior to leaving, I invited interested members to take part in a Psychometry Exercise. Those who accepted were Baggy, Catseyes, Christine, JulieD and Merrick. My idea was to bring back stones from historical overseas locations for participants to 'read'. I collected the stones from various places, and each stone essentially held details of its history within its energy. After collection, the stones were stored separately, and handled as little as possible, to avoid interfering with their energy, and to ensure a clean reading.

Psychometry is a process by which an item is held in the hand or placed near the forehead, and psychic impressions are received. In the case of very old items, the reader may receive 'flashes' of history. Such impressions may be received either in sequence or randomly. Some people 'see' pictures in their mind like a movie, where scenes and images of people are shown in detail. Others receive 'flashes' like a slide show, in sequence or at random. It is common to use stones, because they capture the history and essence of their environment within their energy. For instance, if one was to place their hands on the monoliths at Stonehenge, or even just hold a small piece of stone from that location, one may 'see' or 'feel' some of the history of that place. Psychometry may also be used by psychics or mediums to tune into the energy of someone for whom they are doing a reading. In that case, an item that is carried or worn regularly by the person would be used by the medium, as it would hold current details in its energy. There are no rules regarding psychometry. The process used and results received depend on the individual.

Whilst in Scotland and Finland I collected a variety of stones from historical sites, some of which were Tantallon Castle in Scotland, Holyrood Palace and Abbey in Edinburgh and Hame Castle in Finland. The stones were taken (with permission) from hidden places where they would have rested undisturbed through the centuries, such as small spaces inside the walls of ruins or from secluded, untouched areas.

Everyone who took part in the exercise picked up some relevant information about locations where I obtained the specific stones that were sent to each of them. Catseyes and Christine 'saw' scenes that depicted historical events and buildings, and they picked up and sensed details of relevant people from history such as Mary Queen of Scots. Merrick 'saw' the grand entrance of Holyrood Palace and gave details of the large statue there. Baggy 'saw' a rocky coastline, with a ruined castle on a hill, which was relevant to one of her stones that came from the castle itself. JulieD sensed a feeling of being trapped with nowhere to go, when she held a stone from the underground prison cell pit at Tantallon Castle ruins.

All of the great results, together with many more equally fascinating details, can be found in the Psychometry window of the forum's Paranormal Portal. There you will also find full details of where each person's stones came from, and details of what each person picked up and 'saw' in relation to their stones. Judging by the feedback, it seems the psychometry exercise was enjoyed by everyone who took part in it and by everyone who followed it.

On the opposing scale of the abovementioned examples, there are sightings of highly evolved aerial technology (futuristic) that have been described as hologram like. Some of these reports are accompanied by accounts of anthropomorphic life forms that seem to be iridescent or again, hologram like.

If there are layers of realities that are phased before and after the moment we consider as the 'present', would this explain the sensations of déjà vu? Is there a form of subconscious link between two or more dimensions?

In addition we have other phenomena to consider. These are the etheric entities (or astral entities) who seem to acknowledge our existence in the 'physical' realm. They are the remaining consciousness of the physically departed. If we consider the concept of different realities, this 'astral sphere' would more than likely lay independent of those mentioned formerly.

If these realities exist on different levels of natural law as mentioned previously, then why is it that some are privy to visually observe certain phenomenal events? In other words, why does this convergence of two realities occur?

A convergence theory may seem far-fetched and be easily dismissed because of its unpredictable nature. It is a phenomenon that appears at random (or so we assume that to be the case) therefore it falls outside the law of prediction making any crucial experimental studies impossible. Giving any form of fundamental explanation to the ingredients of such a convergence would only be hypothetical (a stab in the dark at best) thus ruling out the principles of prediction leaving little or no possible opportunity for examination.

I became curious in the probability of such an intersection when my team and I researched an old deserted facility for studying possible paranormal activities. On a few occasions, members of the team including myself became aware of disturbances in the hallway. Although boarder lining noticeable, these disturbances (occasionally in waves or mild pulses) were translated as being a typical 'buzzing' of an active facility. When these pulses peaked we could hear an overpowering voice over others as if discussing some vital issue. Other than our small team one can rest assured that the building was completely empty.

This 'buzzing' was more clearly evidential during a thunderstorm, which also intensified other paranormal phenomenon such as poltergeist activity. It is a theory that astral beings are capable of absorbing energy thus energising themselves in a charged environment (especially during a thunderstorm), much like ball lighting or other naturally occurring plasma. Apparently this enhances the astral beings' ability to interact with our environment.

In contrast to the astral entities and their behaviour in the above conditions, the convergence of another reality that displays events of the past is an added rarity and is not understood (hypothetically) as to why it may occur. There are, however, naturally occurring phenomena that may one day present a predictable link to the convergence theory.

Could phenomena such as naturally occurring wormholes distort the fabric of space to a point where a convergence of realities may be possible? How do these unstable acts of nature occur? The initial process of a wormhole begins in an extreme squeezed vacuum state where energy density falls below zero. According to scientific theories, wormholes are then formed by negative energy. In general, the effect of negative energy bends the geometric fabric of space.

Could certain regions on our planet lend themselves to subterranean gravitational abnormalities that can produce regions of squeezed vacuum measured by negative energy within which naturally occurring wormholes may form?

Could the intersection of geomagnetic field lines (or spurts of opposing field lines) or some natural manipulation contribute to spawn a rip in the boundary fabric of two realities?

The convergence is like a black hole created by a collapsed star – we can see the effects but not the source.

If nothing else, this information offers an open view on the subject of multiple realities and the possibility of their existence. We shouldn't be quick to take the view of positivism (describes that any process that relates to positive facts and affirmations of theories that predict observations through orthodox scientific methods is regarded as authentic knowledge but regards anything else as meaningless).

If we don't see it, it doesn't mean that it doesn't exist.

We must be mindful that our limitations do not dominate our thoughts, for we tend to rule out possibilities beyond those

Which will make life much easier. We also invested in new Olympus voice recorders and some additional camera equipment.

We have plans to building a new computer to do the job of our current dvr, which will increase our ability to monitor up to 8 independent station at once. A system is currently being designed by Sargent Jazza who has become a consultant to the team this year.

The team have some fantastic investigations lined up for this year. We are solidly booked up to the end of 2008 and we can't wait to do them and report our findings back to you all on the forum and on our team website at www.spookspotters.com.au

In December the team did a course in video editing and were proud to walk away with completed projects.

Work still continues on our book project and it is starting to look exciting!

We also have some other exciting projects in the wings including a locally produced paranormal radio show.

Woohoo!

Victoria

The ideal person:

Is based in Victoria/Melbourne. You are easy going, can drive to locations, willing to work as part of a team, will sign a non-disclosure agreements. You should also have technical skills either with video, audio, film editing etc. Or be willing to learn these skills.

To apply:

We'd prefer your application on video! Either video camera or webcam is fine. We want you to make it and edit it (if required) and tell us why we need you on our team. Sound difficult? Maybe....but as part of our team you will need to have some technical skills. So you'll either know how to do this or be able to work it out. If you don't have access to a video camera, you can send us an audio application. Please email us the link to your video to contact@paranormal.com.au

Conditions:

Our normal probation and training period and conditions apply.

FREE EMAIL ACCOUNTS

Do you have a free email account on your forum membership?

More than 6 months ago we changed the terms of service on the forum to prevent free email accounts being used on forum memberships. This is to help avoid ease of registration of multiple accounts to those who would seek to cause disharmony on our forum. Despite numerous emails, PM's and newsletter requests, many people have yet to change the email address on their membership account profiles.

We had always intended a 6 month notice of this change and that time is well and truly up.

Therefore the following members now need to change their accounts immediately or face log in problems.

We will not accept free email accounts such as gmail, hotmail, yahoo, msn or any other free email service. We do manually check each registration now. So you will have to use the email account provided to you by your Internet Service Provider. If you do not have one of these, you are able to use your employment email address, or student email address from a tertiary institution. If you do not have one of these, then you must email us at contact@paranormal.com.au to make arrangements to keep your membership.

Aside from the ones listed there are also numerous free email accounts from other companies too numerous to list.

The following memberships are affected, so please check the list to see if you are affected.
